Mr. Dunham did not impress Mrs. Simmons as being a laboring man, as he was neat appearing and appeared to have a fairly good education.

At about 9 p.m. on Monday evening October 30, 1922, Mr. Dunham again called at Mrs. Simmons's home requesting lodging for the night. On this particular night before retiring, Mr. Dunham sat in Mrs. Simmons's parlor reading the local newspaper for about one hour, and then retired.

On the following morning at about 8 a.m. when passing out, Mr. Dunham requested Mrs. Simmons to save for him any mail that might come there, and that he would call back later for it.

Mrs. Simmons is positive that Mr. Leo Dunham is an absolute stranger in town, she herself having lived at Susquehanna, Pa., for the last fifteen years.

Operative upon leaving the home of Mrs. Simmons gave her his name and hotel address, requesting her that if Mr. Dunham should call back to have him get in touch with Operative at the hotel.

Operative kept the house at #217 Prospect St., Susquehanna, Pa., and also the railroad station at train time under surveillance, until about 10.30 p.m., and then returned to the hotel and discontinued.

Operative noticed under this date, that a H. E. Daniels of Jersey City, N.J., and a Mr. DuBois, of East Orange, N.J., was registered at the Canawacta Hotel.
